THE PROBLEM

Staff travelling between our three offices either rent cars or claim personal mileage. The same routes are driven several times a week, booking is done individually, and nobody can see whether a colleague is already making the trip.

PROPOSED SOLUTION

Lease two pool cars per office and let staff book them – and offer spare seats – through a shared calendar on the intranet.

EXPECTED IMPACT

Lower travel costs, fewer individual journeys and an easier way to share trips. [Submitter’s estimate of savings]

Stage history

Moved to Under Review

Strong support across offices. We are checking leasing costs with Facilities before deciding on a pilot.

We drive to the South office every Tuesday – would happily share.

Finance can pull last year’s mileage claims for these routes if useful.

What problem does it solve?

Meetings often start late because people can't get the room screen to connect, and there's no way to see if a room's screen is broken before booking it.

Your proposed solution

How would you fix it? Keep it practical.

Great fit with this year's client-experience goals. IT is checking whether our current document system can host the portal before we plan a pilot.
